WE DISAGREE

It's probably a safe assumption that most Australians haven't heard of the ancient rock carvings on the Burrup Peninsula. The carvings are old, very old, and there are literally thousands.

They have been recorded as being six times older than the pyramids and eight times older than Stonehenge. Yet the WA Government wants to increase the industrial development on the Burrup — increasing pressure on this ancient landscape.

Imagine building an ammonia plant next to the pyramids. Or a factory astride Stonehenge. Yet our elected members want to do just that — build more heavy industrial plants on the Burrup, WA's equivalent of Stonehenge, or the pyramids.

The Federal Environmental Minister is seeking public submissions about what should happen on the Burrup. Submissions close tomorrow.

Sean Hefferon, South Fremantle.
