

Dear friends,

This week, over twenty thousand of you rallied and helped turn the tide to protect an area of priceless heritage many didn't even know existed: the ancient Indigenous rock art on the Burrup Peninsula.

Now we've got their attention. In a stunning backflip, both the Western Australian Government and Woodside have just dropped their opposition to heritage listing. This is a huge step towards saving the remaining rock art from destruction, and making Burrup what it should be - one of the world's most well-known and safely-visited heritage sites. The West Australian reported, "...Woodside director Keith Spence said yesterday the company had changed its position after being influenced by public opinion...".

Thank you and congratulations.

But we still need to keep the pressure up to drive this campaign home for the real 'win win' victory our economy and our ancient Indigenous heritage deserve. Woodside are now asking for their proposed Pluto mining site to still be allowed as a condition for their support for heritage listing. That's right, they want to have their development cake and eat it too.

This isn't nearly good enough when experts from all sides of politics, heritage and industry agree further development should be moved to other suitable sites, and all the remaining rock art saved. Support the change in direction, but tell them we're watching, and want real heritage protection - including boundaries that ensure all further development occurs elsewhere.

www.getup.org.au/campaign/SaveOurHeritage