

Letters to the Editor

Burrup rock art must be protected

24th January 2007, 9:00 WST

It is a concern to me that Australians, and particularly West Australians, lack the understanding and comprehension of the destruction of the indigenous rock art on the Burrup Peninsula.

These sites are home to examples of the world's largest indigenous rock art. They date back to the ice age and pre-date the Judeo-Christian religions.

We should be up in arms as Woodside and the WA State Government continue to destroy this historic heritage site.

The site is a heritage gallery for the world and future generations.

I thought only nazis destroyed art.

DEBORAH SIBOSADO
BROOME, WA